Mandalas

What is a Mandala? A mandala is a geometric, integrated circular design or structure around a unifying center.

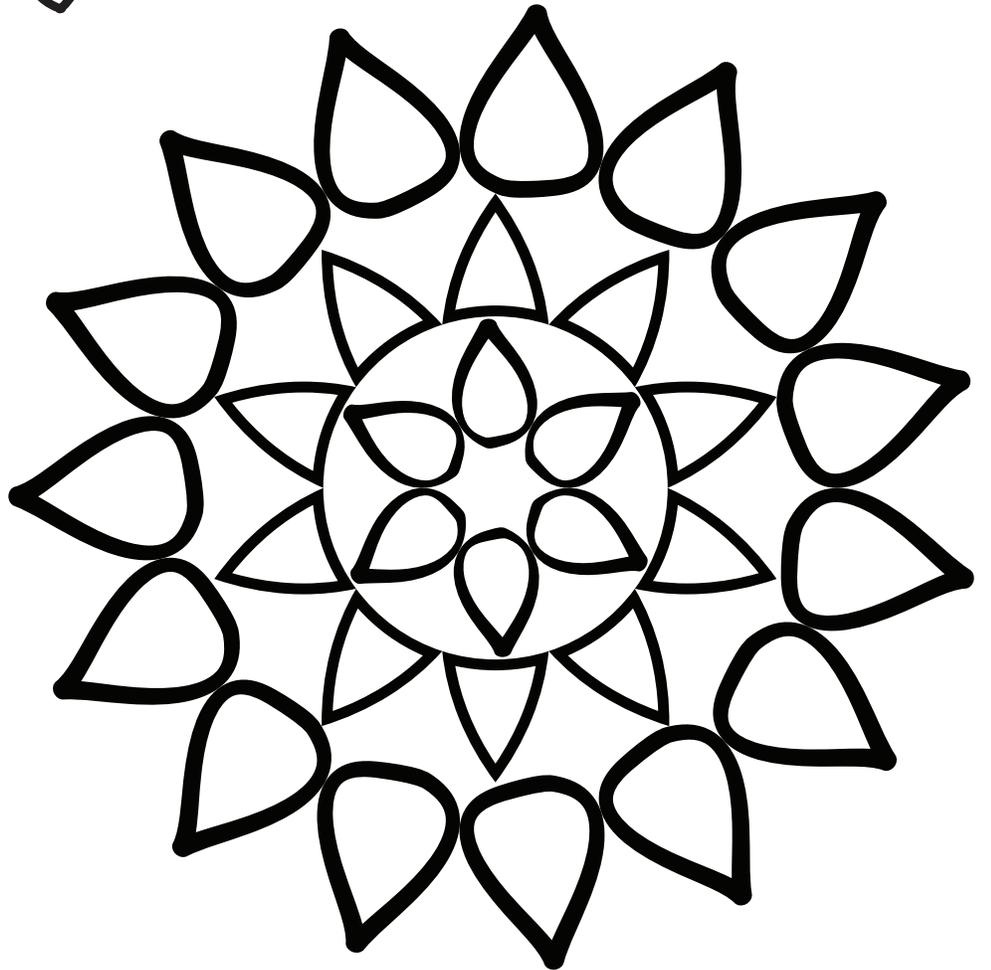

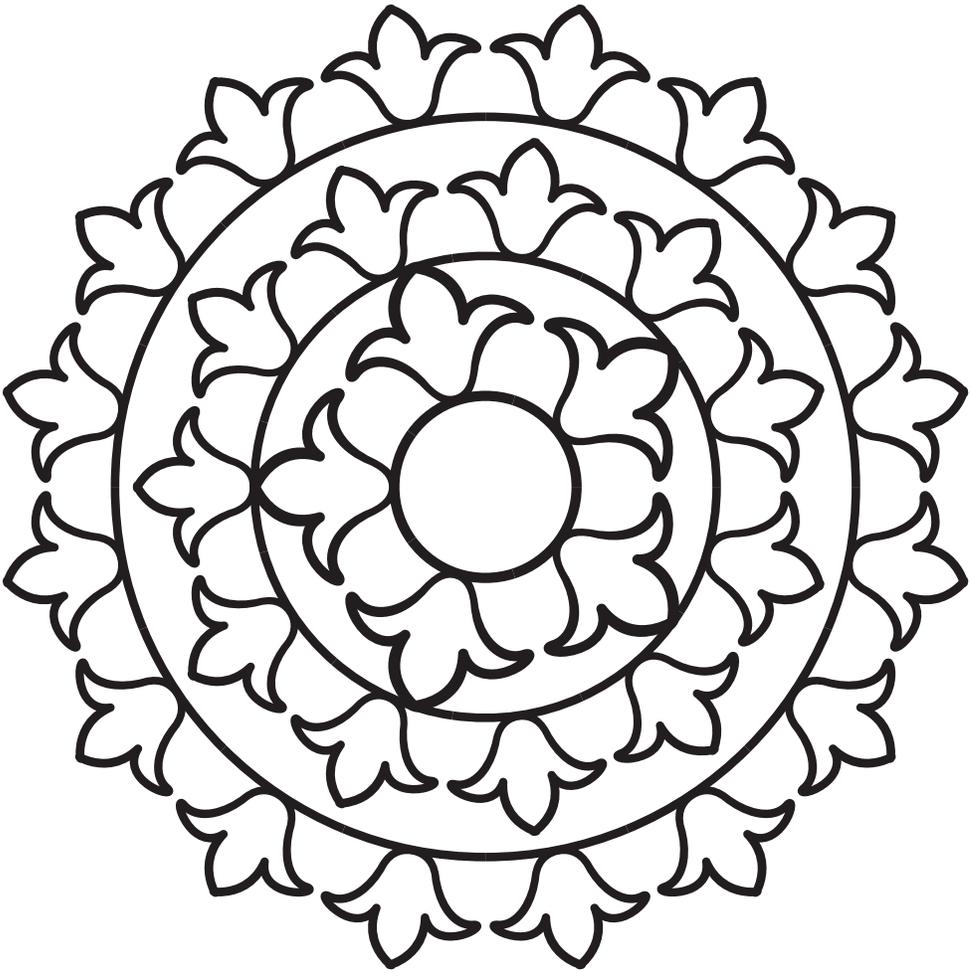

Where do Mandalas come from? The word comes from the classical Indian language of Sanskrit and loosely translated means “circle.”

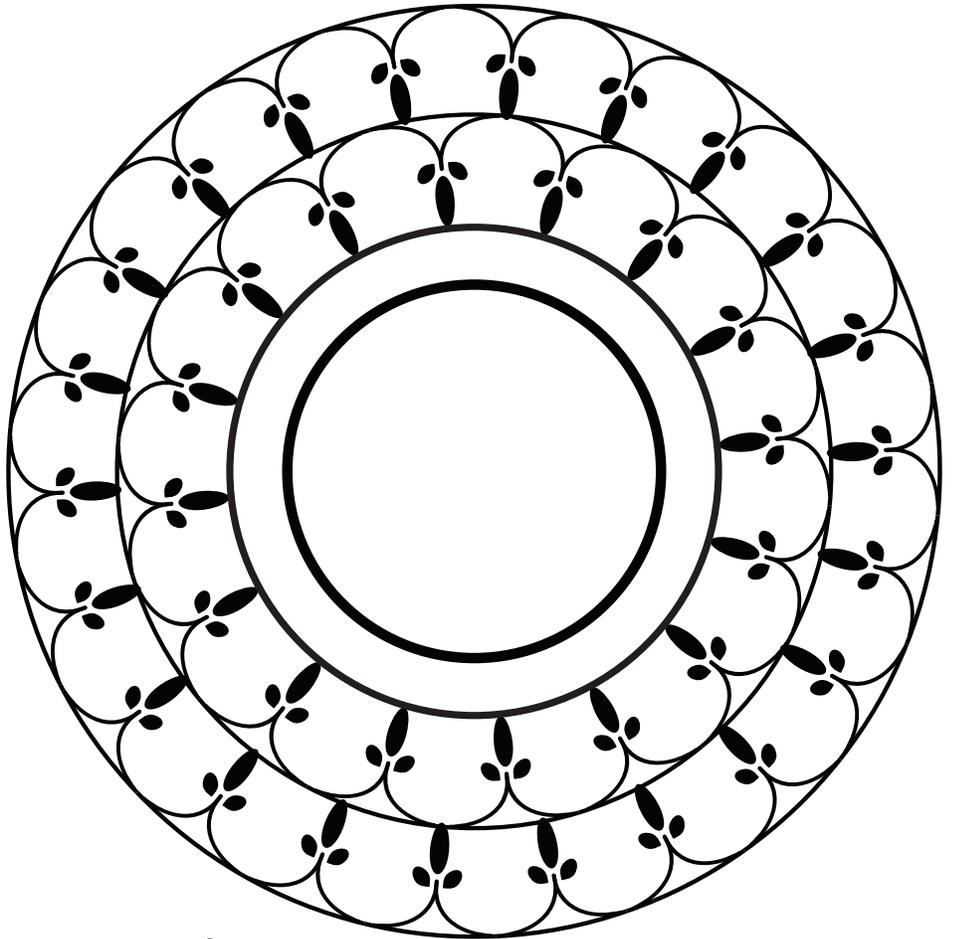

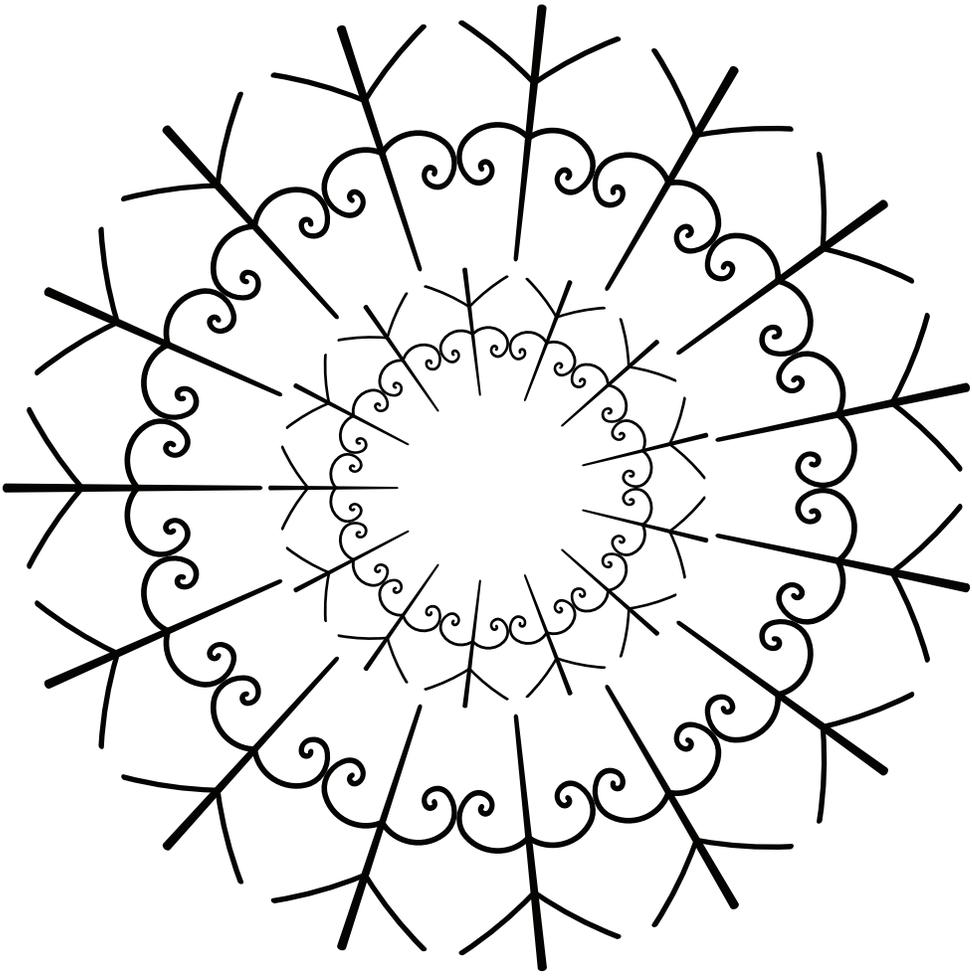

Who uses Mandalas? Mandalas are traditionally used in Hinduism and Buddhism but can be used by anyone.

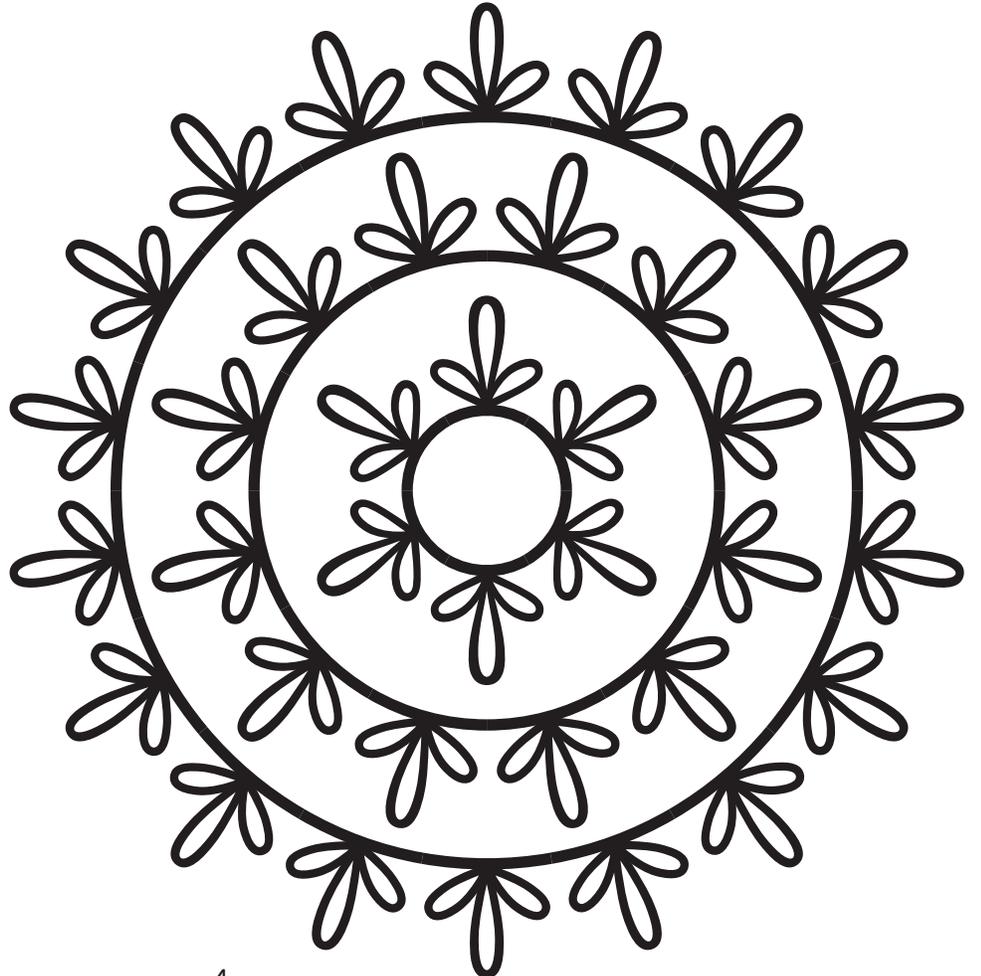

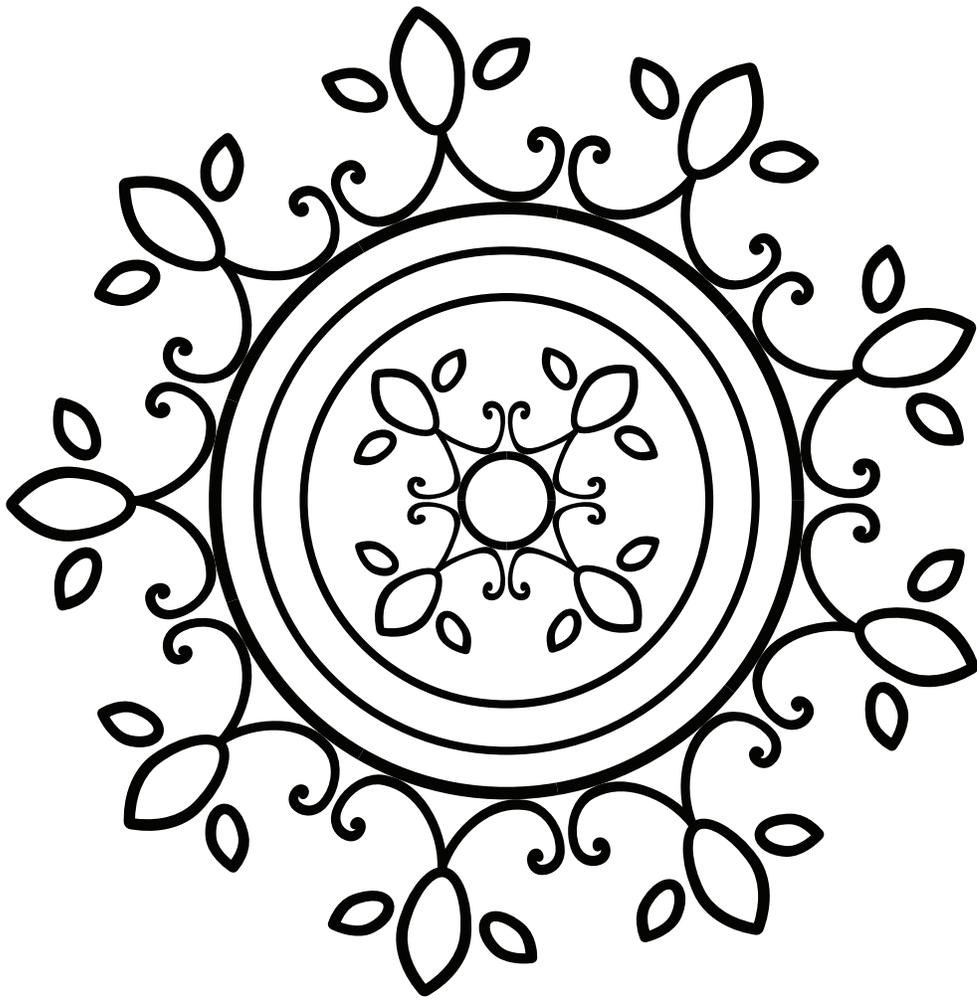

Why are Mandalas used? In Hinduism and Buddhism, mandalas are used as an aid to meditation.

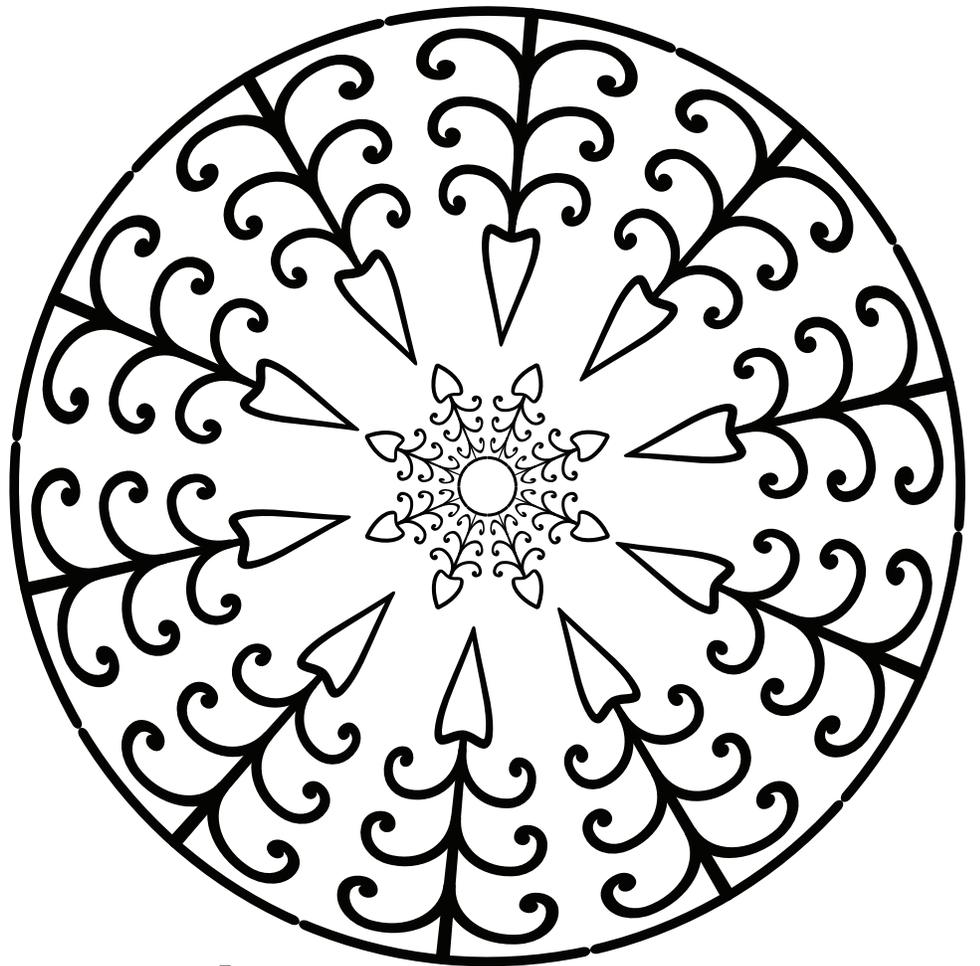

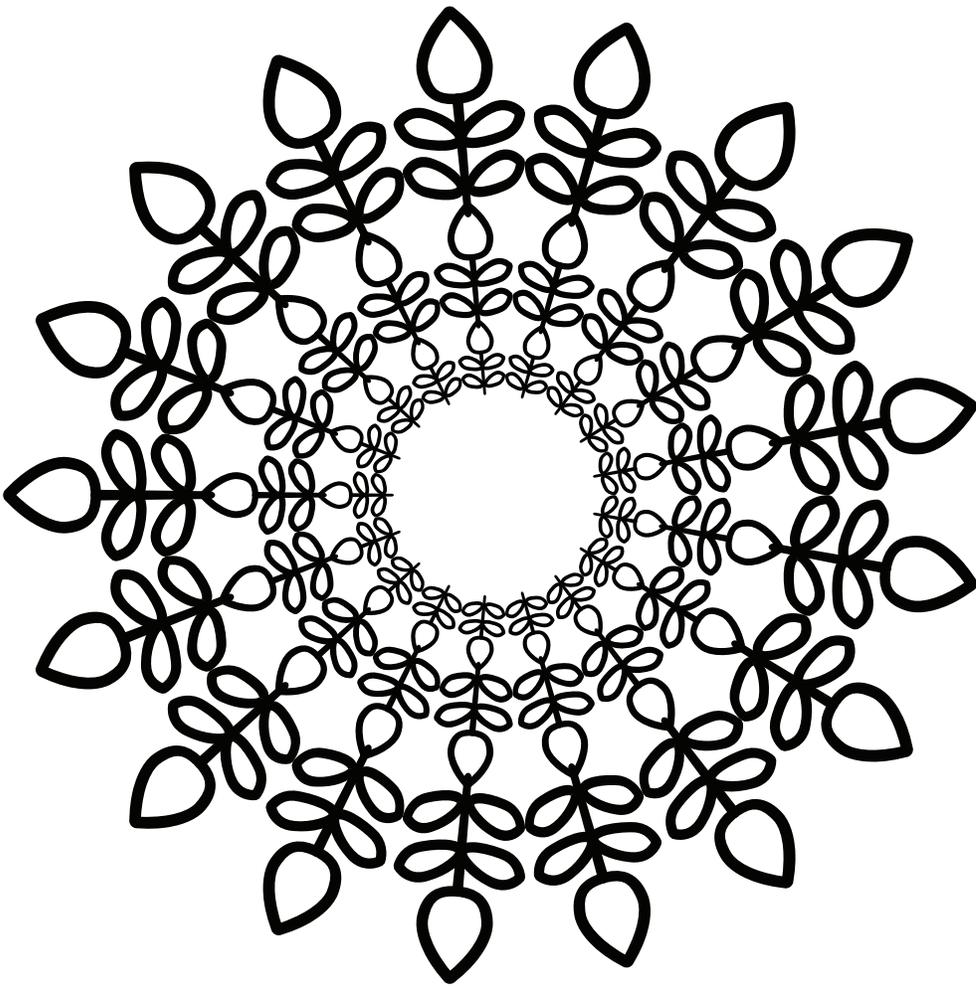

Mandalas are more than a simple shape. They represent wholeness and are seen as a model of life itself. They can represent a deity, the cosmos, or the entire universe and appear in both the material and non-material aspects of life.

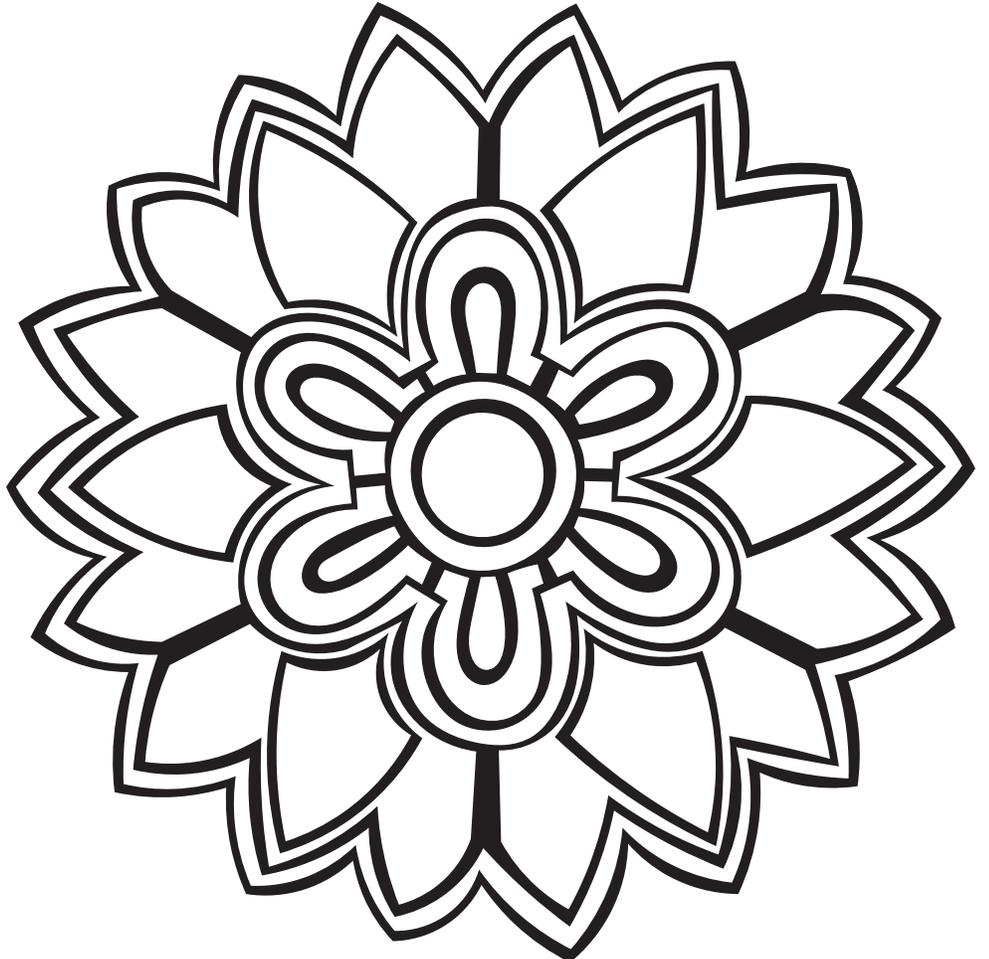

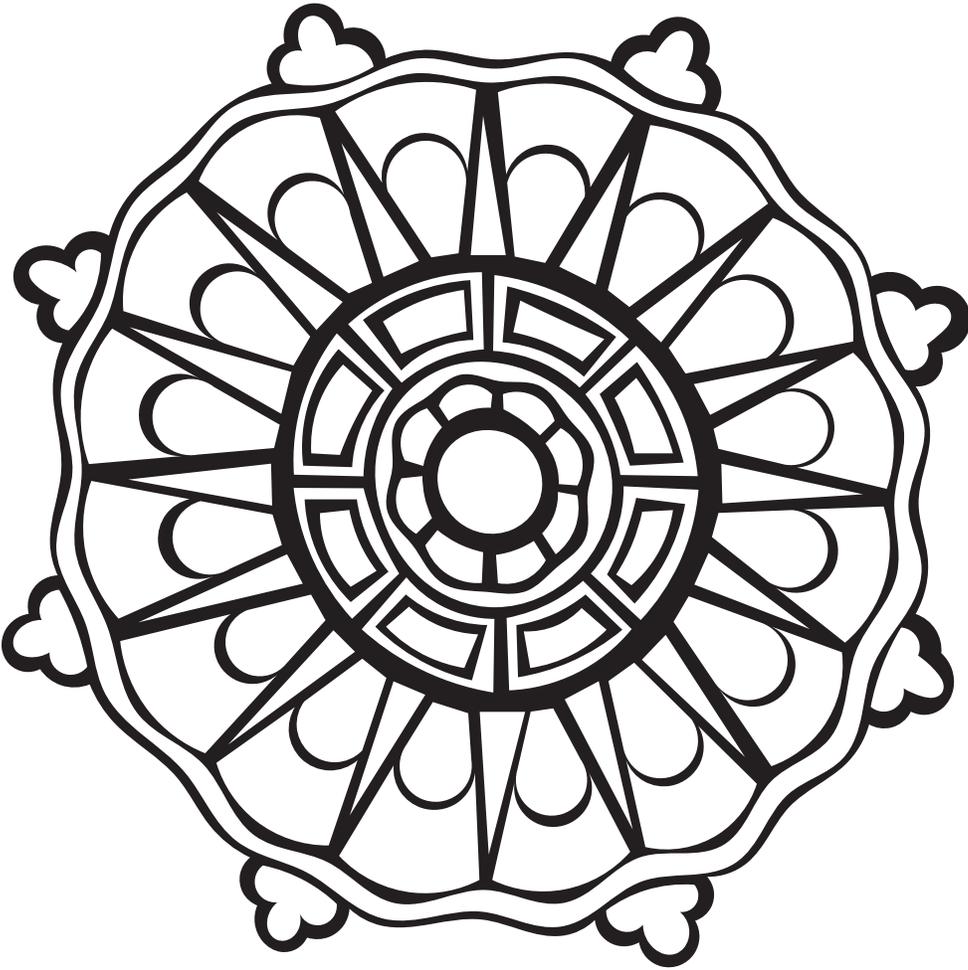

The mandalas within this book range from simple to complex and feature many different shapes, designs and patterns. There are pages where you can practice completing mandalas and even design your own.
