Chapter 9 – The Fall of Rome Section 1 – Daily Life In Rome Notes

Roman Citizens	Social Classes
Rome had too many people, a million or more lived within the city limits	Society was made up of a small number of rich people, many poor people, and slaves
In the Republic, and early years of the Empire, only people who lived inside the city were counted as citizens	Most of the jobless people survived by handouts from the government
Every 5 years men registered for the Census, this was the only way to claim citizenship in Rome	The rich had elegant homes inside and outside of the city called Villas
Women, girls, slaves, and those who	The Rich often had feasts with entertainment had been freed from slavery were not counted as citizens  Eventually citizenship stretched	The poor were entertained at circuses to keep them from rioting and were often fed grain at them beyond those who live in Rome, but this did not change the love people had about Rome	Both rich and poor went to circuses to watch gladiators, usually slaves, fight to the death.
ROMAN DAILY LIFE
$\overline{\qquad}$
Family Life	Slavery
Family Life  Most Romans valued family life	Slavery Slavery was common in Ancient Rome
Most Romans valued family life  The government supported families by offering land to fathers of three or
Most Romans valued family life The government supported families by	Slavery was common in Ancient Rome About one third of Italy's population
Most Romans valued family life  The government supported families by offering land to fathers of three or more children  The head of the Roman household was the Paterfamilias (Oldest father)  The oldest male of the house owned everything inside of it including	Slavery was common in Ancient Rome About one third of Italy's population were slaves by 50 <sub>B.C.</sub> Household slaves usually had a trusting and friendly relationship with
Most Romans valued family life  The government supported families by offering land to fathers of three or more children  The head of the Roman household was the Paterfamilias (Oldest father)  The oldest male of the house owned everything inside of it including women, children, and slaves  Women's freedom depended on her husband's wealth and status	Slavery was common in Ancient Rome About one third of Italy's population were slaves by 50B.c. Household slaves usually had a trusting and friendly relationship with their owners Some slaves rose to high positions in
Most Romans valued family life  The government supported families by offering land to fathers of three or more children  The head of the Roman household was the Paterfamilias (Oldest father)  The oldest male of the house owned everything inside of it including women, children, and slaves  Women's freedom depended on her	Slavery was common in Ancient Rome About one third of Italy's population were slaves by 50B.c. Household slaves usually had a trusting and friendly relationship with their owners Some slaves rose to high positions in the households of the wealthy Outdoor slaves led harsh usually short lives by sleeping in chains, mining for metals, and fighting in gladiator